1. The stiff attitude of the Chinese Communists at the Kaesong Peace talks will not change. They will continue to fight. They will also coordinate their efforts with the Soviet peace offensive in the hope of discovering an honorable way out through changes in the international situation.
2. The Chinese Communists' chief hope is still to stabilize their own international position. They expect that the Soviets will again raise the China problem in the November meeting of the United Nations Assembly, using the settlement of China's status as a prerequisite to the peaceful settlement of the Korean war.
